SPECIAL UNIFORMS FOR ARMY CHAPLAINS

Provided by Emperor William for Members of Lutheran and Catholic Churches.

BY LA MARQUISE DE FONTENOY. MPEROR WILLIAM has just signed a decree providing special uniforms for the Lutheran and Roman Catholic chapiain of the German army. It is identical for both denominations, and comprises a short cassock of gray khaki, extending downwards to the knee, with an up-right collar and cuts of violet-colored silk. The mantle or overcoat is of gray cloth. The knee breeches—for all the chaplains of the army are mount ed—are of the same colored khaki as the cassock or long tunic, and are worn with high riding boots. The hat is a soft one, of the Rough-Rider kind, with a band of violet ribbon, and adorned with an enameled cross, and he imperial cockade. On the left arm the chaplain wears a sieeve band of violet silk, showing the Red Cross on a white ground. A pastoral cruciffx is worn round the neck by a polished steel chair. The Roman Catholic chaplains, moreover, wear, when cele-brating mass or vespers, or when hear-ing confession, a violet stole,

Being, like his father, a Tory, he is likely to be elected at an early date as one of Ireland's representatives in the upper chamber of the imperial legislature at Westminster, since the Irish peers entitled to vote at these elections are overwhelmingly Unionist.

Lord Dunboyne is the twenty-sixth baron of his line since Sir Thomas But-ler, or Le Botiler, received his summons as a peer, in 1324, from King Ed-ward II. This peerage, which was forfeited for a short time to the crown during the Wars of the Roses, was restored by an act of Parliament at the beginning of the reign of Edward IV., and Henry VIII further confirm-ed the honors of the tenth Lord Dunboyne of his day by granting him a patent, in which the descent of the barony was restricted to his heirs male Lord Dunboyne's estates are situated in County Clare, and he makes his principal home at Knoppogue Cas-tle, near the town of Quin, in that

VI. for a dispensation, to retire from the episcopacy and to marry. The reply which he received from the Vatican was couched in such severe terms of censure that the hot-tempered Irinh prelate publicly seceded from the Roman Catholic Church, joined the State Reformed Church of Ireland, and then married a Protestant woman, very much his junior. There was no issue of this union; a circumstance which exercised a considerable influ-ence upon the mind of the ex-bishop. Another thing which perturbed him was the suiden death of his old fam-ily coachman. He was being driven along a lonely road, far away from any village, when the man was suddenly taken very dangerously ill. Realizing that the man was at death's door, the ism, besought his old servant to make his confession, so that he might grant him absolution. The coachman stubbornly refused, on the ground that his master was an apostate. Lord Dunboyne assured him that even an apostate in such times of dire necessity had full power given him by the church to grant absolution. But, although this is an established doctrine of the Catholic Church, the coachman could not be got to believe in its existence, ceives supplementary stipends as and died unshriven, declaring that he senior master of the Supreme Court of would sooner trust to the mercy of Judicature in London, as registrated of the court of Country of Country of State of State of Country of State of State of Country of State of St would sooner trust to the mercy of God than receive absolution at the hands of a renegade.

The ex-bishop was horror-stricken and profoundly impressed, and the in-cident undoubtedly contributed to his reconciliation to the Church of Rome succeeded in his Irish peerage by his eldest sen, Captain the Hon. Fitzwalter terwards. Just before his death, which took place at Knoppogue Castle, on May 7, 1800, he was received back into the Roman Catholic Church by the Rev. Dr. Gahan.

Wishing to divert as much property as possible from the cousin who heir to the peerage and to the enestates, he, after munificently providing for the welfare of his wife, bequeathed all the remainder of the property of which he could dispose to the Maynooth College for the education of youths intended for the Roman Catholic priesthood.

Naturally, litigation ensued, and during the course of it the Rev. Dr. Gahan was sent to prison for several months on a charge of contempt of court, in disobeying the order of the presiding judge that he should reveal the deathbed confession of Lord Dun-boyne. The widow of the ex-bishop survived him for sixty years, dying in 1860, at the age of ninety-six. Curiously enough, no mention made in the current issue of "Burke's reference, of this marriage of the twenty-first Lord Dunboyne. The "Pecrages" are equally silent as to the name of his wife. Yet that she was in the eyes of the law his level. was in the eyes of the law his legal

The original patronymic of the fam ily was Le Botiler, scions of which played a prominent role in English hislory as far back as in the reign of King Richard Coeur-de-Lion. The name was afterwards corrupted into Butler; and Lord Dunboyne has a common ancestor with the Marquis of Ormonde, who is the hereditary chief butler to the crown of Ireland, and at-so head of the entire house of Butler. Knoppogue Castle, the ancestral home of Lord Dunboyne, is one of the few old Irish feudal castles that are still habitable, and with its fine old staircases, dungeons and secret passages, is a most interesting place of residence. The meaning of the name is "Kiss on the hill." The late Lord Dunboyne was for

In the days of the early Norman rulers, of the Plantagenets and of the Tudors, the King's remembrancer was a high official of the King's Court of the Exchequer, and he was expected to keep a record of all those nobles whose fines and dues had remained unpaid, to look after the numerous royalties of the crown, to attend to the disposition and mainte-nance of the castles and estates that had been for treason forfeited to the sovereign, and to supervise the pay-
